In every district of Mississippi there are warring Radical factions. All efforts at conciliation seem utterly unavailing. Even in countles in which neting the section from three to ten dollars for improved; some is held at thirty dollars; at Waco it is as high as fifty and one hundred dollars, and still going up. I never tid believe before this year a hand could make ten bales of cotton, but from Austin to Columbus it will be done this year when most work has been given the groes have overwhelming majorities the success of Greeley's adherents is in some success of Greeley's adherents is in some instances assured. In Marshall county the Independent South tells of fearful feuds and inappeasable hates that rend in fragments the once compact Radical organization. During the discussion of political questions at Holly Springs by B. D. Nabers, a scalawag and ex-member of Congress, he was interrupted by one Abbott, carpetbagger, who now holds four offices, and has had the fifth, that four offices, and has had the fifth, that was told was not the case. The same feuds pervade the Radical party everywhere in Mississippi, and if such speeches as those pronounced by General Chalmers, in Mississippi, and by Baker and Herndon, in Alabama, were made everywhere in the South, there is hardly a county, still less a State, that would give Grant a possible majority.
